attle Lad as a Tramp. "I'm awful tired, an' I don't mean to be a tramp all my life, so I don't. How I do wish I was back in Seattle with my pa an' ma."

It was a bit of a waif, an 11-year-old boy, who spoke thus to a Council Bluffs, Ia., Nonpareil reporter a few days ago. He was freekle-faced and wore an old blue knit cap. His shoes were worn through at the toes and his clothes were threadbare and torn here and there. His dirty and wan face, shrunken blue eyes and attenuated body proved that he had not been living on the fat of the land.

His name is James Thompson Egan, and his father is J. B. Egan, city editor of the Seattle, Wash., Daily Press.

He ran away in July last and since then his father, nearly distracted with grief, has been searching everywhere for him, writing hosts of letters to chiefs of police, advertising in news-papers and employing detectives. Several thousand dollars were thus expended in vain. Last Saturday the prodigal son wrote his father stating that he was in Chicago and ready and anxious to return home. The parent telegraphed money to the general passenger agent of the Northwestern there and also telegraphed the lad to call there for his ticket. "I've had enough of it an' plenty to spare," said the lad. "I've been goin' with George Haulan-he got sent up EUGENE, Or., April 2.—The dry afterwards for burglary-an' he an his gang said there was nuthin' like "That was at Portland. So when-
